SALAURA

Sandy SalAura, a queer and Dalit individual hailing from Mumbai, has journeyed through a life marked by the struggles of being queer, brown, and Dalit. These challenges, however, have only served to shape and define him. Despite the obstacles he's faced, his undeniable talent has proven unassailable, paving the way for a flourishing career in the artistic and creative realms.

SALAURA

Sandy's connection to voguing is nothing short of mystical. Upon first witnessing it, he felt an innate resonance as if this art form was imprinted in his very being from a past life. His involvement in the fashion industry encompasses design, visual merchandising, and creating captivating spaces for fashion labels. Not only that, but he's taken on the role of a stylist, lending his expertise to events like the Lil Flea and Blanc Magazine, while also crafting stunning looks, styles, and handling hair and makeup for his stage persona, Sandy SalAura.

ABOUT ME

But his impact doesn't stop there. Sandy SalAura has broken barriers by bringing drag into mainstream commercial spaces in Goa. His journey in movement commenced as soon as he took his first steps. He went on to join a modern dance company under Summet Nagdev's core team and further honed his skills in ballet, jazz, Latin American dance, and Kathak.

His presence in the Bollywood industry spans over a decade, and he's been a standout performer on shows like "Jhalak Dikhlaja" and even claimed victory in "MTV Elevator Pitch." Sandy has also toured with the legendary A. R. Rahman and has been a sought-after freelance dancer collaborating with numerous choreographers in the industry, with a few lucky enough to receive his assistance.
